If you're like me, you'd quite like an Andreas Gursky, but don't want to do what's required to pay for one and can't be bothered to fly to Bahrain and hire a helicopter to copy one. Florian Freier found a cheaper and more convenient way. See how he did it here: Recreating Andreas Gursky

THE EYE OF GOD BY FLORIAN FREIER

The Eye of God is a project by Florian Freier, is a collage from Google Earth recreating the well known Andreas Gursky photograph.

"As many young photographers, I always dreamt about flying around the world, visiting spectacular spots and places, just like Superstar Andreas Gursky does. So finally I decided to stop dreaming and just do it...in Google Earth. So here is my personal remake of Andreas Gursky's megapicture." - Florian Freier. See more;

Using Google Earth to Recreate a $1,000,000 Masterpiece, for About $0

BY CLIFF KUANG Tue Jan 12, 2010

A clever hack allows one young photographer to recreate a famous work, minus the price tag.

Andreas Gursky is a giant of contemporary photography--his massive landscapes and architecture shots document a world overflowing with junk and commerce. Often over 10 feet on a side, they command prices in proportion to scale: His 99 Cent II is the most expensive single photograph ever sold, having fetched $3.3 million at auction in 2007. New, most of his prints command upwards of $600,000.

Florian Freier loves Gursky. He could never afford one. So he recreated one of the master's most famous works, Bahrain I, which depicts a racetrack and looks like an abstract painting, using only Photoshop and Google Earth:

As Freier writes, "As many young photographers, I always dreamt about flying around the world, visiting spectacular spots and places, just like Superstar Andreas Gursky does. So finally I decided to stop dreaming and just do It ... in Google Earth. So here is my personal remake of Andreas Gursky's megapicture."

Awesome.

Recreating Andreas Gursky (Google Earth Remix)

Posted on 12 January 2010, 1:33, by Stefan, under Arte, Photo, Web.

We grew out of Andreas Gursky a couple months back, after we received an email from a copyright protection company that works for him, in which they kindly and subtly threatened to sue. That's precisely why we savored this piece by Florian Freier as much as we did. In it, he uses Google Earth to recreate a large scale photograph taken by Gursky in Bahrain, which he later printed himself... I wish there was a free high res download of it so that EVERYONE could print their own Gursky without the fear of being threatened by the dog artist and his posse.

Yet, in any case, you can check out the "making of" video here:
